Heidelberg A great place to study

The city of Heidelberg is located in southwestern Germany in the state of Baden-Württemberg. Nestled in the Neckar valley and close to the French border, Heidelberg is best known for its romantic castle overlooking the old town with its cobbled streets and many cafés. Heidelberg has a tradition of more than 600 years of higher learning. This academic culture is reflected in the presence of a multitude of academic and scientific institutions and of cultural venues of all stripes. The city is home to 140,000 permanent residents and 35,000 university students. The international airports at Frankfurt and Stuttgart are within easy reach. Heidelberg is a stop on Germany's high-speed rail network.

Heidelberg University of Education is a modern research university with a focus on educational research and the training of teachers and other professionals in the field of education. The University's overriding objective is to achieve excellence in educational research and training and to support university students and researchers from Germany and abroad in the development of their educational or academic career.
